He also sheathed the exterior with German siding and keeps it painted white. He also has the base of the tall trees around the house painted white, a custom frequently seen further south that is intended to keep insects from damaging the trees, as well as adding a well-kept appearance to the grounds of the house.

kept their African name, which was "Beulin", and indeed chided their brother for abandonning their ancestral name. Mr. Stuckey has other memories related to Africa, the passage across the Atlantic, and life under bondage.

Stuckey said that he was raised in a log house, which as he described it, was similar in design and size to the ones found in southern Maryland occupied by slaves and sharecroppers. Like many of the log houses in this region, the log wall were reinforced by pegs descending from the plate into the log below.

Mr. Stuckey is a delightful and intelligent oral informant and to be interviewed more throughly because of his rich experience and memory. In addition, the documents, newspaper clippings, and photographs would be an excellent material for a local library, where they could be preserved and used.

As part of this survey, Stuckey himself was photographed, as were several of his pictures. Included too is some literature from Stuckey's campaign as the first Negro to run for the State legislature in Chrles County,

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This handsome two story house, is surrounded by shade trees, fruit tree, shrubs, and flowers and is filled inside with family mementoes and furniture, all reflecting the life (and Liveliness) of the occupant/owner, Luther Stuckey.

According to him, the original house was built "about a hundred yearsyears ago" by a black landowner, Walter Chapman, and consisted of the two room core of the present sturcture. It stood 1½ stories in height, was frame, with a two bay facade that faced south toward the road in front. The "hall" of the hall and chamber house was heated by a wood burning stove whose brick stack ascended through the center of the house. The chamber downstairs and the upstairs wer unheated. A boxed staircase ascended the eastern galbe wall in the hall.

In 1942 Stuckey purchased this small house, and enlarged it.

He raised the roof to a full two stories, added shed dormer windows, attached two rooms along the entire facde of the original house, and enlosed the porch along the back. In the back length he added double hung sash windows with 2x2 lights, not because they were cheaper, or more expensive, or more stylish, but because, as he explained, "that was the kind of windows they had at the sotre."

I think this explanation sheds light on the reasons for many of the windows that we see in houses.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The principal significance of this house is its occupant and owner, Luther Stuckey. He was born in 1894 in rural South Carolina, the son of ex-slaves who were farmers. Throughout his life he has used his stong personality and vivacious mind to improve (and free) himself, his family, and his people --people by definition, he would argue, including both white and black. He has taught school for manyyears in South Carolina and Maryland, and has been engaged in the civil rights movement. He served as President of the NAACP in Charles Coutny for 24 years and was a leader in the desegration of public facilities in Charles County spearheading, for example, the entry of the Freedom Riders into the County. Though retired, he continues to work for human rights, and is involved in many local concerns.

His house contains a treasure chest of photographs and documents related to his life and times. Among his pictures are photographs of his ex-slave parents. These were photographed as part of the survey, he said that "Stuckey" was a "servitude name", which his father had taken from his former owner because he liked and respected him due to his quality as a man. His two brothers, however,

Brief History Of Luther Harold Stuckey

Luther Harold Stuckey was born April 5, 1294 in the rural village of Savage, Florence County, South Sarolina. His father was a former slave. In addition to operating a small farm, he was a turpetine chipper, (an individual that cut holes into trees making possible for the sap to run. That sap was processed into turpentine and into rosin.) He was active in the church and in other community activities. The mother was a devoted christian and good mother to her ten children.

Luther Harold as a boy and youth displayed leadership ability in the Sunday School and related church auxiliaries. His activities were carefully observed by his pastor. The pastor felt that Luther Harold possessed the potential necessary for advance learning. The pastor started working with the Stuckey Family toward making preparation for sending the young men away to school for educational growth and improvement. The father was agreeable to the plan.

During the early years of the twentleth centruy, public education for Negro children in the Souti, especially rural sections, consisted of 90 days or three months school term yearly. Most rural families were larged, as many as ten or twelve children. The family income was too small to consider being sent away to school, all the children that posse see potential for learning, and it became necessary to make personal selection within the household. Many a boy or girl was found by a devoted Sunday School Teacher of the trained minister.

It was a sad as well as a joyful gathering at the Suuckey Home, that late September 1911, when relatives and friends gather at the Stuckey Home. They came to extend best wishes to Luther Harold, that was leaving that evening for college. Shortly before the sun faded away in the west, a trunk was placed in the spring wagon, Harold Luther with his father mounted to the wagon seat, and the old faithful mule, Liz, started the 36 miles all night journey from Savage to Lake City, the nearest railroad station, where the train would carry him to Columbia the State Capitol, and also the seat of Allen University. His journey was successful and he was at college for Registration Day.

Less than fifty years had passed since emancipation of slaves, when Luther Harold entered Allen University. Every college for Negroes in the South, had to take its students from poorly equipped schools, often on the elementary level, and first prepare them to do college work. They all had a preparatory division ,called the academy. It was necessary for Luther Harold to spend three years in the Academy before starting his four years in the college division. He received his degree in May 1918.

Immediately following his graduation 1918 his local Draft Board called him up to Military Service. Before completing his basic military training, he was returned to Florence County, an put in charge of Agricutural Extension Service Work. It was his task to help increase farm food production in South Carolina, that was badly needed during World War I.

Shortly after the ending of World War I, Mr. Stuckey entered the teaching profession. He served as teacher and principal for 9 years in his native state of South Carolina, 3 years in North Carolina and 10 years in Maryland.

During his tour of school teaching in South Carolina he accepted the Principalship of a graded school near Conway, S.C. Among the teachers under his supervision, was Miss Elnelda Victoria Cox, daughter to the local Baptist Minister and a product of South Carolina State College, Orangeburg, South Carolina. Immediately there developed a real courtship, that lead to marriage. From this union there were born six children four boys and two girls. They all now survive, and are good citizens. The two girls are college graduates and the youngest son is now a senior at Morgan State College.

Luther Harold Stuckey have been actively identified with Civil Righs Activities, since, he affiliated with the local Branch in Darlington, South Carolina in 1921. When he found that throughout rural South Carolina, the school term for white dhildren was six months and for Negro children, 90 days or three months, he organized the Negro patrons and started the battle to remove the difference be ween the school term for the two races. In Florence County, the battle was won within a year and throughout the state within three years. His second battle in his native state was to secure equal salary for Negro teachers. Salaries for Negro teachers were doubled, but years passed before equalization came. Mr. Stuckey's work was not in vain.

Mr. Stuckey desirous of educating his children he found it necessary to leave the teaching profession he loved so well, and seek better pay with the Federal Government. About 1940, Mr. Stuckey accepted a position at the Naval Powder Factory, as it was known at that time, located at Indian Head in Charles County Maryland. He later moved his family to the county, and settled at Pisgah, Maryland. He at once joined the Charles County Branch NAACP, and shortly became its President and served in that office for 24 years. It was through his effort that the Freedom Riders came to Charles County. and invaded the motels and taverns along U.S. Route 301, and after the Supreme Court declared separate schools for various races unconstitutional, the Charles County Board of Education provided limited admission to negro children to attend former white schools, but did not permit them to ride school buses with white children. Mr. Stuckey led his NAACP Branch to seek relief through the U.S. District Court at Baltimore. The case known as the "Hart Case" was won, and negro children were given the right to ride school buses with regards to race. When Mr. Stuckey reached the Naval Powder Factory at Indian Head he found separate tollets for the races and like wise separare places in the cafeteria. He at once started a battle to remove segregation from the entire plant. His efforts were crowned with success, even though he was later dropped from the roll.

Mr. Stuckey has been interested in religious, civic, fraternal and political organizations and activities in Charles : o County for more than a quarter of a centry. He helped to organize the Charles County Farmers' Acsociation that for twelve years successfully sponsored a Couty Fair for Negroes. He is president of the Pomonkey Health Center. Past B ilding Fund Secretary of Bee Hive Lodge No. 66, Free and Accepted Mason. Lay leader of Smith Chapel Methodist church. Was Chairman of the Association for Political concern, the organization that influenced 7 negroes to enter the 1966 General Election. He is Bail Bondsman serving Charles and St. Mary's Counties. He has worked faithfully toward securing employment for Negroes with the Telephone, Company, the chain food market in Charles County and other establishments. His entire life has been dedicated towards the advancement of his race, as well as all races of mankind.
